pale morning light crept across the great fields that were alike his pride and his despair—what was the use of trying to aleep when sleep was an impossibility. He was about to quit the table when big Steve entered the room to say there was a white fellow at the door. "Feich him along in here," said Ware. The white fellow delivered a penciled note from Murrell. Whets he was gone, the planter ordered his horse.

As Ware rode away from Belle Plain he cursed Murrell under his breath. His own inclination toward evil was never robust; he could have connived over a long period of years to despoil Betty of her property, but murder and abduction was quite another thing.

Three miles from Belle Plain he entered a bridle path that led toward the river. A grawth of small timber was standing along the water's edge, but as he drew nearer, those betterments which the reldent of that lonely spot had seen fit to make for his own convenience.
